Search by Keywords

If you enter more than one word, the search will default to the logical operator AND. For example, if you enter the words solar collector, the search result will return those items containing both words, although not necessarily together as a phrase.

If you wish to search for items containing any one of a number of words, then you should insert OR between each word, e.g., solar OR collector will return any item which contains either of the words solar or collector or both.

If you wish to search for items containing an exact phrase or combination of words in a specific order, then you should enclose the phrase within quotation marks, e.g. "solar collector".

The search is not case-sensitive, i.e. a search on Solar will yield the same result as solar or SOLAR.

For example, ship will search for ships, shipbuilding, shipping, as well as other terms starting with "ship"), land will find inland, subland, landing, etc.

You can also restrict your search by the NOT operator. If the word NOT is placed before a keyword, it will cause the search program to find documents that do not contain that keyword, e.g., ship NOT shipbuilding will search for all terms starting with "ship" except shipbuilding.
